

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air "Stolen Honor" days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But, when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the few and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" with a not-so-hidden agenda, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
